Mapping Access to Abortion in D.C.

About the Project

This digital history project seeks to work within the reproductive justice framework to map and compare access to abortion in Washington, D.C. before and after the passing of Roe v. Wade, from the 1960s to the present.

The Map

Using articles from The Washington Post, the map plots different abortion providers from the 1960s to 2020. The points are color coded to distinguish between individual providers, abortion clinics, and hospitals. Users can toggle back and forth between decades to see just how (in)accessible abortion was in the District over time.

Community Participation

Recognizing the impossibility of finding all abortion providers, and with the goal of normalizing abortion in D.C., community members are invited to participate in this project by adding their own points to the map and/or sharing their abortion story on their own terms.
